She noted the data is as of May 24, 2024, and that the number of suspensions and expulsions is comparable to last year. The disproportionalities for students who identify as African, Black and Afro-Caribbean are at a lesser rate than previously reported, and the rate for Indigenous students has decreased from 2.3 times more likely to be suspended in June 2023 to 1.8 as of May 2024. Superintendent Stubbings noted that a Procedure on Refusal to Admit has been presented for approval and that, effective September 2024, there will be a specific code for students formally refused admission through the exclusion procedure. She spoke of the commitment to continuing to analyze suspension data to examine practices and strategies, including examining factors such as progressive discipline practices, authentic relationships with students, home-school partnerships, sense of belonging, and culturally relevant and responsive classroom practices. The goal is to give educators the knowledge to be reflective about all decisions to reduce the disparities in outcomes for Black, Indigenous, and racialized students.

Another trustee asked whether further reports will continue to be brought to the Board, and remarked that consequences for Black students still appear to be greater. Superintendent Stubbings responded to questions of clarification, noting: the administration continues to interrogate the data on a regular basis, placing targeted supports, training, and interventions where needed; explicit measures in place to ensure procedural fairness in reporting incidents and suspending students; disproportionality rates take into consideration student population of communities.
